

The Wisconsin Alliance for Women's Health values social justice, compassion and responsibility

"Reproductive freedom [represents] control of my ability to achieve my goals. I also depend on reproductive freedom to make good choices for the children I have."

— Wendy, mother, age 42

"Women are the mothers, daughters, sisters, friends and executives of our community. If women are not healthy, there is a strain on our families and communities."

— JoEllen
technical writer, age 30

Many people's values are instilled by their involvement with faith communities. With the deepest respect for our members' diverse views about faith, and its role in public and private life, the Wisconsin Alliance for Women's Health affirms that:

- Each woman deserves an opportunity to achieve her full personal and professional potential.
- Women are responsible, moral decision-makers who are in the best position to judge how to take care of themselves and their families.
- The well-being of all women — particularly those who are poor or underserved — is essential for the well-being and wholeness of all.

Faith communities around Wisconsin have called for better access to quality, comprehensive women's health care, which has been shown to improve not only women's health and lives, but also the health of others. Many communities of faith champion women's health as a reflection of their values of social justice, compassion, and responsibility.

You can make a difference

We encourage people and communities of faith that share our values in affirming each woman's well-being through public policies that respect women's lives and health.

The Wisconsin Alliance for Women's Health is a new statewide coalition of diverse partners committed to improving women's health across the state. We invite you to join us to ensure that women have the information and resources they need to make the best health decisions for themselves and their families.
